The OHIO
ALUMNUS

A Letter from the President

Alumni and Friends of Ohio University:

Recently at a meeting with the trustees of the Ohio University Fund, I was asked about the future of your University and what was needed above everything else. I told them the one great regret which I have as I come to the end of my administration is my failure to establish an Ohio University Endowment Fund. In the very early days of the University it was anticipated that such a fund would exist. By the Ordinance of 1787, 44,000 acres of land were reserved to establish a "great university west of the mountains." Over the years this magnificent grant was lost to the university in one way and another until at the present time less than $6000 annually comes from this original grant.

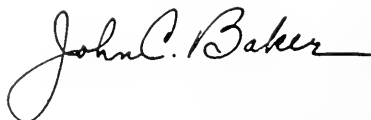

Two of the most significant developments in my administration were the successful establishment of the Ohio University Fund in 1946 and the Sesquicentennial Scholarship Fund in 1954. Both, backed by the Alumni, will serve the university and students for unnumbered decades. The Scholarship Fund, of course, can be used only for scholarship purposes. The Ohio University Fund, Inc., with its tax exemption features and its legally recognized right to accept gifts large and small fully deductible from Federal income taxes, makes it possible for Ohio University to build a great endowment fund within this framework.

As I look into the future, I feel certain that the most important step to be taken now would be the establishment of a substantial Ohio University Endowment Fund. This, I hope, Alumni everywhere will support vigorously. The income from such a fund might either be earmarked for important projects or left to the discretion of the trustees. Such a fund which might soon amount to millions of dollars would immediately expand the activities of the University in many different ways. It is not an accident that those universities either privately financed or state financed with endowment funds are the outstanding and rapidly developing universities in this country and in the world today. An endowment fund would give stability to all our finances, as well as make possible special professorships, an art collection, advanced research projects, scholarships, special libraries, prizes and awards, and many other innovations.

If the Trustees of Ohio University, Alumni officers, the Alumni, and all friends of the University in their wisdom launch an endowment fund, I will pledge my full support to help you make this project a great success.

In closing I should like to thank all of you for your loyal friendship since Mrs. Baker and I came to Ohio University. It is impossible to think—to dream—of a time when we are not part of your great program.

Cordially yours,

A New

DIRECTOR, THE OU FUND

IN 1945, a few weeks after Dr. John C. Baker was inaugurated as president of Ohio University, he was beset with this administrative problem: the university's mailing department was temporarily without funds to renew a metered mail fee at the post office. Out of this experience, and the realization that similarly perplexing financial problems would crop up in the life of a growing university, President Baker set about as one of his first major administrative undertakings the formation of a source of supplemental operational funds.

Known as The Ohio University Fund, Inc., and chartered on October 11, 1945, this increasingly important service arm of the University has enabled the trustees and the president to initiate scores of programs of direct benefit to students, faculty and staff, otherwise not provided for through state appropriation.

These programs have been supported by and large during President Baker's administration through contributions for current usage. Such gifts have played and will continue to play an important part in enabling Ohio University to continue its march toward overall excellence. Today, however, just as in other areas of university endeavor The Ohio University Fund is undertaking a new dimension in its operation.

The Endowment Fund

The new dimension will be known simply as the Endowment Fund. Not to be confused with the existing OU Fund, but rather carried on within the framework of it, this new avenue of support enables alumni and friends to specify that their gift will become part of a fund from which only the income will be used. The permanency feature of such a fund has proved tremendously attractive to hundreds of thousands of alumni of those colleges and universities already operating such a program.

Unanimous action by the board of directors of the Alumni Association, the trustees of the OU Fund and the University board of trustees has paved the way to initiate an Endowment Fund during the final year of President Baker's administration. Coming as it does at this time, in response to a request from the President, the first year of the new program enables alumni and friends to express in a tangible way their appreciation for the growth the university has enjoyed during "the Baker years."

Alumni Participation

During the current school year, alumni and friends will be invited to participate in the annual Ohio University Fund campaign. The invitation will include the opportunity to share in the initiation of this significant project. When this opportunity to participate comes—whether you chose to earmark a gift for "current usage" or "endowed usage"—you may be assured that you are joining thousands of other alumni in expressing appreciation for the accomplishments of your retiring president.

You may be assured, further, that you are taking a personal part in providing the margin of difference between a great Ohio University—and an even greater Ohio University.

VISITORS OHIO YARDS TO GO

By Joann Conover

IT WAS EXCITING to go back . . . but good to be home.

Returning for Homecoming at Ohio University was the re-living of memories . . . and a reminder that many years have gone by.

It reminded you that you're older, and certainly wiser, than the strange young faces seen as students that weekend of Oct. 22-23.

But for re-living . . . it was the familiar sign, "Athens, Ohio. The Home of Ohio University" that made you tingle just before swooping down the hill on Rt. 33 into Athens.

How many times did you pass that sign in the four years . . . homeward and back?

Then it was Court St. There were several changes: a store gone and a new one in its place . . . or just a new face.

The old gateway was still standing with memories of hurried steps to class and the kissing circle beyond with its myriad coats of paint.

With a quick glance at familiar campus buildings and a few of the new, you hurried to greet old friends at the alumni luncheon.

There the strange young faces of students faded into familiar ones from years ago. It was to the game with them following the luncheon, then the coffee hour afterwards. That evening there was the alumni dance at the Athens Country Club . . . and then to bed exhausted. Hmmm, what a Homecoming!

A Homecoming Reflection:

The Rally

The Parade

THOUSANDS WATCH the 1960 Homecoming Parade Saturday morning repeat themes similar to "Beat Them Redskins." Thirty-six floats of all sorts, sizes and shapes were either pulled, driven or pushed through the parade route.

The Luncheon

WHIFFS OF PIPING hot cream chicken over Chinese noodles, waldorf salad and date nut sandwiches whet the appetites of alumni as they stand in line for the buffet style Alumni Luncheon. Eight hundred were fed that Saturday at noon.

The Game

A CAPACITY CROWD paused . . . tense . . . waiting for the ball to snap and OU to plunge forward for a touchdown Saturday afternoon. Reports say 15,167 saw OU beat Miami University for the first time in 18 years with a score of 21-0.

Halftime Activities

AS A WARMTH of appreciation is extended by his alma mater, Les Carney (left) accepts a plaque in recognition of his performance in the 1960 Olympics. Commending Carney for placing second in the 200 meter dash, the plaque was presented by Athletic Director Carroll C. Widdoes (right) in the presence of Alumni Association President Edgar Shoemaker (center).

DON C. PEDEN (left) exchanges a hearty handshake with President Baker after the football stadium was officially named in his honor at halftime. Peden served 21 years as coach of OU's football team from 1924 to 1946, minus two years when football was not played because of war.

After the Game

WITH HATS ON BACKWARDS, the OU Marching Band makes its traditional victory trek up Richland Ave. to Court St. after the game. The band honored President Baker with a "This is Your Life" show at halftime.

MANY WANDER DOWN to East Green after the game to take a look at the winning house decoration. Announced at halftime, the winner was Washington Hall's large black oven and a moving baker named "Big Daddy."

The Dance

DID YOU KNOW "Mamma Weaver" graduated from Ohio University? Yep . . . in 1932 and summa cum laude too!

Now many Clevelanders would know "Mamma Weaver" because she's read letters from the book by her favorite son, Charley Weaver, to numerous womens' clubs, PTAs and church groups there.

Mamma Weaver is in reality Mrs. A. R. Virgien.

Mrs. Virgien graduated from Ohio University with a Bachelor of Arts degree, majoring in drama and English.

Previously she attended Hillsdale College in Michigan and later did graduate work at the University of Wisconsin.

Since then Mrs. Virgien has incorporated her talent into both her hobby and her work.

"Mamma Weaver" is just one of her character roles used to entertain Clevelanders. She also appears as "Auntie Mame" and "Dear Abby."

She is currently working on readings from the Broadway play, "The Miracle Worker," the story of Helen Keller's early years.

Mrs. Virgien first portrayed Charley Weaver's mama last year when a friend saw her in a costume and said:

"You look just like Charley Weaver's mamma in that get-up."

She appears as an elderly country woman with a nasal drawl and reads from the book, "Letters From Mamma," reporting the doings in the mythical town Mount Idy, Ohio.

Mrs. Virgien averages one to three dramatic programs a week. She is, in addition, active in the Lakewood Little Theater, where she has appeared in over 25 productions, the Three Arts Club of Lakewood, the Peter Pan Players of Rocky River, St. Peter's Episcopal Church of Lakewood, PTA and Girl Scouting.

A mother of two children, Vicki, 10, and John, 12, Mrs. Virgien lives with her husband at 21101 Morewood Parkway, Rocky River.

Previous to her present endeavors, Mrs. Virgien worked in the WHK continuity department in Cleveland for five years, one year as continuity director.

After she was married she went to Denver to join her husband and was program director for one year at KFEL there.

Mrs. Virgien says, "I was Cleveland's first woman radio announcer" . . . and then explains, "when all the men went off to World War II."

Since then she has had her own women's radio programs and appeared locally in many radio and TV dramas and commercials.

Mrs. Virgien, the former Mildred Finnicum, is proud of the fact that both her parents are Ohio U. graduates . . . her mother, Edith Eaton Finnicum, having attended her 50th reunion in June. Her father, John L. Finnicum, died three years ago.

INDIVIDUALITY

In a Free Society

This article is adopted from an inspiring speech given by Dr. Starcher at the August Commencement of Ohio University. A 1926 graduate of OU, Dr. Starcher was a professor of mathematics and later a dean at his alma mater before going to the University of North Dakota as president in 1954.

DR. STARCHER

By Dr. George W. Starcher

THE PHENOMENON of change is most dramatically evident to me when I recall that I graduated from college without ever seeing even a picture of a photoelectric cell, a TV set, a radar screen, a jet engine, air conditioning, frozen food, an antibiotic, a nuclear reactor, a bulldozer, a guided missile, fluorescent light, a plastic bag, an electric dishwasher, a long-play record, or power brakes.

Science seems to have shifted from the orderly ignorance of Newton's time toward a state of enlightened confusion felt in our day. The force behind this accelerating change is related to the fact that of all the scientists the world has ever known, most of them are still alive. And we know that the relationship between the growth and application of knowledge and the expansion of higher education is more than one of simple correlation.

On every side there are voices warning us of impending conflict far more ominous than the competition with Russia. It is a spiritual struggle being waged by the educated mind that fears the loss of individual enterprise and human values brought on by industrial society. Sage observers of the rush of progress are asking whether we know how to be ourselves when every human quality, except what we need to "fit in" efficiently, is being suppressed.

Lin Yutang in his book The Wisdom of America said, "It would indeed be ironic if the securing of the greatest material freedom should also produce a tendency toward conformity and mitigate against individuality and spiritual development."

We in the university world have our own critics. Some of us have tried to warn the rest of us that individuality is being smothered under a hard surface of campus custom and fairly rigid standards of behavior which the individual departs from at his own peril.

A dean some time ago wrote, "All too many students are apathetic and the commencement procession is in too many cases a procession of missed opportunities. Some students do not know what they want from college; others know but do not want the right thing. Perhaps most frequently the student wants a college degree so he can tell a prospective employer that he is a college graduate. Frequently education appears incidental to him. He is not curious, he smothers his potential, and he may even retreat from growth. He coasts, plays it safe, and is more interested in security and conformity than intellectual stimulation. The challenge of imaginative creativeness frightens him. Give him individual work and he freezes. Getting by is good enough. He is lethargic, uninspired, and his professors have brought him to his own commencement dragging his academic feet."

High School Youngsters Are Concerned

Now even bright high school youngsters are concerned. Some fifty-four high school juniors selected from North Dakota and neighboring states attended a two-week science-mathematics camp on our campus. They were required to take a history of science course taught by a philosophy teacher.

The first week they almost revolted, accused him of many sins, and on Thursday there was a visit to the President's Office where it was suggested that this professor acted like an atheist. I knew the professor, and I knew they would appreciate the shock treatment they were getting if they could be patient and stay with him to the end of the course, which they did.

One bright boy later wrote the professor a letter expressing his appreciation. In his letter he said, "Your course was indeed a welcome change and awakening. It would be well if all high school students could be introduced to more than one version of the facts. It seems a shame that our society makes it almost imperative to be like everyone else. I imagine this is because the weaker persons are afraid to be themselves, and by their actions, being they are the majority, it is difficult even for the strongest to be individualistic . . . It seems hard to believe that anyone under 20 years old, with many unbeliefs and rapidly changing ideals, etc., can become so thoroughly indoctrinated with society's teachings that they lose their very ability to accept anything but what has been pounded into their square little heads for less than sixteen years."

Over against all of this is accumulating evidence that educators at all levels are experimenting and encouraging talent wherever they find it, and that students themselves show increasing concern, steadiness, and maturity. Students are very critical—even of themselves, and there is abundant evidence that they want to be independent and to think for themselves. I do not refer to that cult of conformity—the Beatniks. If our students prefer not to be overenthusiastic about anything, deep down they are curious about the meaning of life, and we know they are digging deeper into questions of religion, morals, and social responsibility than they generally let on.

Educators know that simply repeating what they learned is not enough any more. We have to ask, with our students, whether what we believe is true, to what extent must people be taught to “fit in”, and what do human beings really need most.

We know that “a new refrigerator is not going to keep a soul from spoiling”, and the N15 gives no assurance that it will lift the human spirit. It appears that in the past our assumptions about success, competition, and co-operation have been turned around. Now we must rub elbows, and there are no more empty mountain tops—they all have telescopes and radar stations on them. The question is then how do you co-operate and still be yourself.

Our idea of an individual, as being someone who goes it alone, with no sense of responsibility for others, has to be revised. Our assumptions about life must permit us to be ourselves, while we are helping the masses to become a civilization.

We in the university believe we can do this best by freeing peoples' minds from stereotyped ideas. We may even decide that it is as important to pay what it costs to turn a bright youngster loose in the library, as to subsidize the motivation-research of industry on automobile fins.

We Need Washingtons and Emersons

We may learn that it is as important to listen to President Eisenhower when he says that “we need not only Einsteins but Washingtons and Emersons, too”, and subsidize their development, as it is to listen to the farmer and subsidize the development of new strains of higher yield, more rust resistant wheat—for right now the ratio of wheat on hand to our need for wheat is just about the reciprocal of the ratio of brains to the need.

Free schools have long been a part of our social conscience. The average number of years spent in school is increasing because the reach is upward, and for reasons other than just to help people find a way to an easier life, or to learn how to live more respectably. It must be a part of the public conscience of the university, of the state, and even of the federal government to see that young people learn how to achieve personal success mingled with the public welfare.

We should not take ourselves too seriously. Carlisle recalled that “Aesop’s fly, sitting on the axle of the chariot, has been much laughed at for exclaiming, ‘What a dust I do raise.’” One time Hennessy and Mrs. Dooley were having a little conversation and at one point Hennessy asked, “Do you think, Mrs. Dooley, the colleges have much to do with the progress of the world?” To which she replied, “Do you think, Hennessy, it is the mill that makes the water run?”

The three and one-half billion dollars we spend each year for higher education amounts to about seven-tenths of one per cent of the gross national product. If we could somehow double this to give our faculty the tools they need and salaries that are competitive with the market for professional people, then the whole world might see that free and responsible enterprise in higher education can maintain the flow of leadership that has given us a pre-eminence in the world of ideas as well as technology.

Academic Excellence Is Our Duty

But given the financial support, the quality of academic excellence becomes the responsibility of each one of us who is in any way related to the university. Those who have the simple notion that the free society we enjoy is sustained solely by the factory and the cathedral, should know that its true roots reach also into academic responsibility.

Those who have had the benefit of a college education will feel it their duty to support and recommend more higher education for more people. Emerson said, “Nature provided for the communication of thought by planting with it, in the receiving mind, a fury to impart it.” He went on to say, “ ‘Tis so in every art, in every science. One burns to tell the new fact, the other burns to hear it.” If this be so, there is hope that education is not drying up at its source.

We have a heritage of freedom, of material things, and of personal opportunity that is the envy of most of the people of the world. This is due in part to those who had the courage to be themselves and to examine systematically and critically the conclusions and ways of thinking that had been accepted for centuries.

Beliefs and ways of thinking become so connected with traditional habits and institutions that to attack one is taken to be an attack on the other. We need people who respond to the thrill of a new idea and who realize that thinking requires effort—at times almost unbearable effort—and who have learned to survive the disharmony that always seems to go with intense intellectual effort.

The individual who is at home with information and at peace with himself needs still another skill not to be confused with knowledge. It is that skill we call wisdom, so beautifully distinguished from knowledge by William Cowper in these lines:

“Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one,
Have oft times no connection.

Knowledge dwells in heads replete with thoughts of other men;

Wisdom in minds attentive to their own . . .

Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much

Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.”

Wisdom is an individual thing. It requires enough courage at times to bet everything on the best guess one can make, and to face the puzzle of life without the comfort of

Rewards for Excellence

An Ohio University alumni couple have provided permanent funds for Distinguished Professor Awards

EDWIN AND RUTH KENNEDY

IN A UNIVERSITY'S march toward continuing enrichment, unusually stimulating deeds sometimes occur, stepping up the cadence of excellence.

This month Ohio University President John C. Baker announced such a stimulus. Its identity: The permanent funding of an award to faculty members attaining excellence in their various fields.

Known as the Edwin L. and Ruth E. Kennedy Distinguished Professor Award, it has been named for an Ohio University alumni couple who share an ardent interest in quality instruction at their alma mater.

Actually, Mr. Kennedy, a New York investment banker, and his wife inaugurated the program two years ago when, as anonymous donors, they made funds available on a temporary basis.

In that time, five awards, each including $1000 cash and six months' leave of absence with pay, have been received by Ohio University professors.

Their reactions are summed up in the words of Dr. Paul Kendall, English professor, internationally-renowned biographer, and recipient of a Distinguished Professor Award last year. In a letter to President Baker, Dr. Kendall wrote:

"The institution of the Distinguished Professor Award offers a most significant stimulus to sound scholarship and good teaching."

Dr. Kendall's sentiments are reinforced by immediate results of the awards:

Dwight Mutchler, OU lecturer in art whose recent mural of the Wright Brothers' development of flight hangs prominently in the State House of Ohio, was an award winner this June. Consequently he is making arrangements to carry out a long anticipated painting pilgrimage to Spain and Italy.

Transcribing an artist's visual perception into words, Mr. Mutchler described his frequent perusals of the award. "If my many furtive glances at it have caused an inordinate expansion of the ego, and at times aggravated a congenital sentimentality to the blubbling-lump-in-throat level, then be assured the thrill has been a constant one," he wrote.

Dr. John F. Cady, professor of history and noted writer, was no less enthusiastic in describing the results of his 1960 Distinguished Professor Award. The award, he said, will provide the opportunity of completing research for a book tentatively entitled "Empire and Commerce in Southeast Asia."

Dr. Cady plans to embark for London this spring, one semester before Dr. Kendall leaves for Europe and final research on the life of Louis XI of France.

The other two Distinguished Professor Award recipients are recently retired from Ohio University. Dr. Robert L. Morton's influence on education spread across the country in the form of elementary arithmetic books with sales exceeding 35 million copies. On the campus, he was known as an inspiring classroom teacher.

Dr. Harvey C. Lehman spent 20 years in research for a monumental volume entitled "Age and Achievement," which made national headlines a few years ago.

Witnessing the results of their "temporary" project, Ed and Ruth Kennedy were profoundly satisfied. This fall they made the decision to permanently fund the award.

In keeping with the objective inspiring the Distinguished Professor Award, the standards for selection remain high. If no member of the faculty appears to merit the award in a given year, no award will be made.

The donors feel strongly that the award must be "a truly important incentive in furthering high quality education at Ohio University."

Recipients are chosen carefully, on the basis of outstanding literary, historical or scientific achievement, or other worthy accomplishments attaining wide recognition, with emphasis on excellence of classroom teaching.

A committee of three faculty members, the university president, and one other member of the administration are to make selections. Terms of awards can vary within the prescribed provisions.

Active in University Affairs

Playing active roles in advancing the prestige of Ohio University is no new venture for the Ed Kennedy family. A partner in Lehman Brothers, one of the foremost private investment banking houses in New York City, Mr. Kennedy has managed to fit service to education in with his busy schedule.

During two terms as national president of the Ohio University Alumni Association (1956-58) he led the way in establishing a financial framework that put the organization on a self-sustaining basis for the first time. Before that, he had been the primary figure in re-organizing an alumni chapter in the New York area.

In 1959 he was named by Ohio Governor Michael V. DiSalle to the Ohio University Board of Trustees, for a term ending in 1966. He also is current president of the Board of the OU Fund, Inc.

Also a member of the Board of Trustees at Hiram College, Mr. Kennedy has established a substantial loan fund there.

A native of Marion, Ohio, Mr. Kennedy graduated from Ohio University in 1927. Mrs. Kennedy (the former Ruth Zimmerman of Massillon) in 1930. After teaching two years, Mr. Kennedy did graduate work at Ohio State, then entered the field of investment management and banking. Later he attended a special session offered at Harvard University.

Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy now live in New Vernon, New Jersey. Their son, Edwin DeWeese, is in the Coast Guard.

There is a favorite saying of Ed Kennedy that "the only money that benefits a man is that which he carefully gives away." Ed and Ruth Kennedy have made a monumental investment in the future of quality education at Ohio University.

The Kennedy Distinguished Professor Award is an incentive to excellence. Its benefits will be harvested not only by the faculty of Ohio University, but by thousands of students entering an era of accelerating academic standards.

IRVING SHULMAN

Irving Shulman Visits OU

RENOWNED NOVELIST Irving Shulman spent two weeks, Oct. 16-30, on the Ohio University campus as a guest of the English Department and Alumni Association. He stopped for a visit on his return trip home to Palm Springs, Calif., after seeing his publishers in New York.

A 1937 graduate of OU, Shulman has authored such books as "The Square Trap," "The Amboy Dukes," "Children of the Dark," "Cry Tough" and "The Big Brokers." His latest work was the script to the movie "College Confidential."

Record Enrollment Reached

AN ALL-TIME record enrollment of 8041 was reached this fall at Ohio University. The official figure was released by President John C. Baker in his annual President's Convocation address.

Branch enrollment has swelled to 3000 with Portsmouth being the largest branch, having 575 enrolled.

Fifty-five Added to Faculty

FIFTY-FIVE NEW teachers assumed positions on the Ohio University faculty this fall.

The largest number added to any one department was 10 to the English Department. The Engineering Department added eight new people; modern languages, five; education, four; and music, four.

The highest position filled by a new person was the director of the newly established School of Architecture.

The athletic department has announced that all tickets have been sold for the December 1 basketball game between Ohio University and Ohio State, dedicating the Brandon T. Grover Physical Education Center.

Walter Andrews Taylor, formerly director of the Department of Educational Research at the American Institute of Architects in Washington, D. C., will fill that position as a professor of architecture.

Two Join AFROTC Staff

TWO NEW staff officers, Maj. Albert S. Babinec and Capt. Howard E. Hallenbeck, were assigned to Ohio University's Air Force ROTC Detachment.

Major Babinec, holder of the Bronze Star and a command pilot, is serving as education officer and instructor of Air Science III here.

Captain Hallenbeck, a Distinguished Flying Cross recipient and World War II veteran, is detachment administrative officer and Air Science I instructor.

Arts Building Contract Let

BAKER AND COOMBS of Columbus was awarded the general contract for the new School of Painting and Allied Arts and the School of Architecture classroom building.

The general contract for the Space Arts Building was let for $930,700.

Contracts for plumbing, heating and ventilating and electricity were let for a total of $376,133.

Nigerian Speaks to Club

PRESIDENT JOHN C. BAKER, Dr. LaVern L. Krantz and Nigerian student Isaac Akioye discussed OU's teacher training project in Nigeria and the future of Africa before the Harvard Business School Club of Cincinnati, Oct. 10.

Two other Nigerians are on the Ohio University campus to do graduate study for one year before joining the faculty of the teacher training project in their native country.

Anthony Lu, Ladele and Samuel Olu, Adelaja plan to earn master's degrees from OU before assuming teaching duties in Ibadan, Capital of Nigeria's Western Region.

Band Day Hosts 23 Bands

TWENTY-THREE high school bands performed at Ohio University's annual Band Day Sept. 24 during half-time at the OU-University of Toledo football game.

The bands, along with the Ohio University Marching Band, formed a large MAC formation for the Mid-American Conference. They played "Military Escort" and "Symbol of Honor."

The entire group was under the direction of Charles Minelli, director of OU bands.

Review Committee Formed

TWENTY-FIVE OHIO University administrative and faculty members are preparing a forecast of educational needs at Ohio University in the next five years.

The committee, called the University Review Committee, is being chairmanned by Dr. Fred H. McKelvey, assistant to OU President John C. Baker, as general secretary.

Representing the OU Board of trustees on the committee is C. Don McVay, Athens.

AWARD-WINNING WRITERS Dr. and Mrs. Paul Kendall pose with their youngest critics, daughters Curley (far right), 14, and Gillian, 4.

Like Husband, Like Wife

WITH A LITTLE twist to the "Like father, like son" adage, its "Like husband, like wife" . . . for the Paul Murray Kendalls of Athens, O.

Mrs. Kendall has been granted an Ohioanna Award by the Martha Kinney Cooper Ohioanna Library Association for her 1959 novel, "The Gammage Cup."

Just two years ago her husband, an English professor at Ohio University, received such an award for his biography, "Warwick, The Kingmaker."

In fact . . . the Kendalls are the first husband and wife ever to receive Ohioanna Awards.

The entire chain of events started when Mr. Kendall placed a wedding ring on the finger of an English protegee, pretty Carol Seegar, following her graduation from Ohio University in 1939. He was an instructor at OU then and recalls that his wife-to-be sat in the front row in his classes.

Over the years the Kendall home has become a haven for creative thought and writing. Mrs. Kendall has five published works as profits of her efforts: two adult mysteries and three children's novels, one of which is "The Gammage Cup."

Mr. Kendall is considered one of the country's foremost biographers. Besides "Warwick", his biography, "Richard III", was published and a third, "Louis XI of France," is in the writing. In addition, he teaches English classes at Ohio University, including creative writing and a creative writing seminar.

Interest in the characterization of a 12-year-old boy as hero of her two adult mysteries launched Mrs. Kendall into writing of novels for young people. She tried her hand at "The Other Side of the Tunnel" and when it was successfully published in 1956 by Abelard-Schumann, started on "The Gammage Cup."

Her newest published work is "The Big Splash." It was published in May by the Viking Press.

The award-winning "Gammage Cup" is a fantasy about wee people, "Minnipins," who inhabit a fictional land and are immune to laws that govern the world of reality. It is described as an "experience" for children from the age of ten to infinity.

The Ohioanna Award book was runner-up for the annual Newberry Award last spring and Mrs. Kendall hopes eventually to make first place for the coveted award.

Children? Yes, the Kendalls have two . . . daughters, Curley, 14, and Gillian, four. Both are in school, so Mrs. Kendall finds the mornings excellent for writing. At noon she "closes the book" and becomes a housewife and a mother for the rest of the day.

She went to Toledo in October to address a round-table of the Ohio Library Association on "The Reality of Fantasy," a title growing out of interest in her prizewinning novel.

VAUGHAN AND BEACHCRAFT

Airport Holds Open House

THE OFFICIAL OPENING of Ohio University's first full-scale aviation program was held Oct. 23 in conjunction with a Conservation Air Tour of Natural Resources in the Athens area sponsored by the Athens Rotary Club and the Ohio Aviation Board.

Beginning with the second semester in February, students will be able to enroll in a flight training course.

The program, directed by former Pan American Airlines pilot David Vaughan, will qualify students for private pilot licenses.

A new administration building and more runway area will be added to the airport in the near future. The university already owns two airplanes, a Twin Beachcraft and Cessna, and two others are available by lease.

Vaughan headed similar programs at Ohio State and Illinois Universities. He has an assistant, Rolland Ismert.

WHETHER or not Ohio University's football team wins the Mid-American Conference title this season, it has accomplished something no other Bobcat team could do since 1942—beat Miami.

The 21-0 decision over the pesky Redskins was extremely gratifying to the 15,167 persons who overflowed Peden Stadium to witness the gala event. The crowd, expanding from the 14,000-seat permanent stands into bleachers erected at each end and into standing room, set an all-time record for an Ohio University home game.

Of course, hundreds of alumni were on hand to spend an enjoyable weekend in what was ideal fall weather.

They saw the outstanding 36-float Homecoming parade, attended the pre-game alumni luncheon in Bird Arena and the post-game coffee hour in the same building, witnessed a Bobcat football team that was not to be denied a victory after so many years of frustration, and mingled with their many friends at the Athens Country Club dance that evening.

It was probably one of the happiest and most festive occasions in many years.

The shutout of Miami was the first suffered by them in the history of the conference and was the largest margin by which they have been beaten by a conference team.

The win became the Bobcats' sixth in a row and third in the conference. Two more league wins, over Western Michigan and Marshall, were needed to set up the championship clash between the Bobcats and Bowling Green for the second year in a row. This game is at Bowling Green on Nov. 12. The Falcons have won all five of their league games so far and have only the Bobcats to play in the conference.

Actually, OU had trouble winning only one game of the first six. And this was caused not as much by the other team as it was by the weather.

This was the 6-0 victory over Xavier, played in a driving rainstorm which left the center of the field in a quagmire. Only Bobcat offensive back who could do much was Fullback Bob Brooks, who churned through the muck for 121 of OU's 144 yards and scored the only touchdown with a 14-yard romp in the second quarter.

It also marked the only game in which OU was held under 329 yards total offense. Against Xavier and the elements, the team could only manage 167 yards rushing and passing.

OU's best offensive performance was against Boston University whom they defeated 36-6, gaining much prestige among Eastern sportswriters who used such glowing terms as "Syracuse in disguise", "big, competent talent", "pulverizing ground game", "small (?) college team operating with the poise of the Baltimore Colts (and almost as large)", "a line that would make any coach drool", to describe the Bobcats.

One even ended his after-game story with this paragraph, "Ohio came to Boston rated No. 1 among the nation's small-college teams and gave every appearance of having come down in class for this game."

The Bobcats gained a total of 415 yards against Boston

U., 319 on the ground and 96 through the air. They scored four touchdowns in the first half, three of them in the second quarter. Boston also gave the poorest ground showing of any team so far on the schedule with a meager 87 yards gained, much of it against the Bobcat third unit which played the last quarter and a half.

Major Victories

Three of the Bobcats' first six wins came over what are classified as "major college" opponents - Dayton, Boston, and Xavier. All other teams on OU's schedule are classified as "small college". OU has led this category throughout the nation most of the season, as designated by Associated Press and United Press polls.

Kent State gave the Bobcats their roughest battle before losing, 25-8, at Kent. The Flashes were the only team of the first six able to gain more than 200 yards against OU. Their total of 261 was compiled on a rushing total of 147 yards and passing, 114. Both figures were highs against the Bobcats.

Against Toledo, OU made its second best offensive showing with 402 yards, 250 on the ground and 152 in the air.

So much of the success of the Bobcats this season has been their sterling defensive play, holding six opponents to a total of three touchdowns, no more than one a game, and shutting out three.

Credit for this success can go to Frank Richey, back-field coach who this year was designated by Coach Bill Hess as overall defensive coach.

Of course, Cliff Heffelfinger deserves some of the credit as he is defensive line coach and the line play has been outstanding.

The Bobcats have fielded a line averaging anywhere from 212 to 216 pounds and including co-captains Dick Grecni (231), Joe Dean (211), both all-conference last year: tackles Dick Schulz (235) and Ted Stute (218), guards Allen Miller (223) and Ken Fisher (198), alternating on the right side opposite Dean, are ends Jim Massarelli (206) and George Belu (190).

Of 47 passes thrown by OU in six games, over 50 percent (24) were caught for 438 yards and four touchdowns. Opponents have completed only 31 of 104 passes for 356 yards and only two scores.

any kind of formula that will give the answers. If one has learned to be himself in that sense, he will have found—in the words of John Dewey—that he can comfortably “lean back on things.”

I do not intend to give advice. A schoolboy once wrote a short essay on Socrates as follows: “Socrates was a great man. He was a Greek. He went around telling people what to do. They poisoned him.” That little story should warn us all about giving advice. But I do covet for you these four things.

First, I hope you always have work to do, and that you achieve personal recognition in your work. In these days of teamwork, co-operation and adjustment, it requires effort and will to be yourself. Each person has a uniquely important role and to fully realize that is to escape the modern ills of frustration and despair.

Second, I hope you will always feel your responsibility to your family, to the organization where you work, to your university, your country, and to all mankind: may you want to understand the objectives of each group to which you belong, and make your life count, not only toward their realization, but also toward refinement of those objectives themselves.

Third, knowing that your education is not complete, I hope that you will take advantage of each new opportunity for further self development. The best part of one's education is that which enables him to accept each new challenge as it comes along: for Edwin Markham speaks for our time when he says.

“In vain we build the world,
Unless the builder also grows.”

There are alumni and friends of this university, throughout this state, and all over the world, who through their interest, work, and financial support are helping to build an even greater university here. They do this not to benefit themselves. Many give scholarships and build where they will never see the results. Others by will, or bequest, or through the OU Fund, make for themselves a larger place in the total university, not just for their own ease and comfort, but for the betterment of mankind. Such is the spirit that builds a better world.

Robert Oppenheimer in The Open Mind has in a single paragraph expressed much of what I have tried to say. It is about as fine an expression of the scholar's creed as I have ever read. He says:

“This is a world in which each of us, knowing his limitations, knowing the evils of superficiality and the terrors of fatigue, will have to cling to what is close to him, to what he knows, to what he can do, to his friends and his tradition and his love, lest he be dissolved in universal confusion and know nothing and love nothing. It is at the same time a world in which none of us can find authoritative prescription or general sanction for any ignorance, any insensitivity, and indifference. When a friend tells us of a new discovery we may not understand, we may not be able to listen without jeopardizing the work that is ours and is closer to us; but we cannot find in book or canon—and we should not seek—ground for hallowing our ignorance. If a man tells us that he sees differently than we, or that he finds beautiful what we find ugly, we may have to leave the room for fatigue or trouble; but that is our weakness and our fault. If we must live with a perpetual sense that the world and the men in it are greater than we and too much for us, let it be the measure of our virtue that we know this and seek no comfort. Above all, let us not proclaim that the limits of our power correspond to some special wisdom in our choice of life, or learning, or of beauty.”

What one can contribute to the contemplation of outer space from here to infinity, or to man's progressive realization of religious and spiritual truths, to aesthetics, to better ways of thinking about our common humanity, will be found by him and by him alone at his point of contact with the world.

We live in a very tense period of human history. Great decisions are to be made in your lifetime. Civilizations have perished because men had not learned how to summon the deliberate, conscious effort required to develop their own individual talents to the maximum. Calm judgment, perspective, clear thinking, insight, and tolerance are not merely rewards of education; they are now a matter of duty—perhaps even of life and death.

The only education worthy of one's effort, or of the university, is one that helps him to see his own relationship both to his heritage and to his own private potential.

"On The Line" Author Is Still Hustling

HARRY S. MILLIGAN

IN THE DAYS of the post-war boom, when East Green was Hog Island and Army khaki was the unofficial school color, a hustling campus newspaperman with a ready smile and a razor wit was serving up chatter in a column called "On the Line."

Harry S. Milligan, better known then as "Spud", has not stopped hustling. Today, just 11 years since he graduated from OU, he can look back on an exciting progression of events leading to co-ownership of a large daily newspaper.

This summer Milligan and a fellow newsman, David Bernstein, bought the 138-year-old Binghamton (New York) Sun. In September they also acquired the Endicott Daily Bulletin, merging it with the Sun to form The Sun-Bulletin. Milligan is serving as vice-president and general manager, his partner the president and editor.

The 1949 OU graduate's rise in newspapering has been meteoric. Beginning as a reporter for the Springfield (Ohio) Sun, he paused briefly in his newspaper career to get a master's degree from Columbia and study at Oxford, England, then went to Eastern North Carolina to edit a weekly newspaper. Within three months he was managing editor of a chain of three weeklies and a semi-weekly. The following year he resigned to form a commercial printing firm in Windsor, N. C.

Shortly after entering the commercial field, he was called into the Army and sent to Fort Benning, Ga., to edit the Infantryman's Quarterly. After 10 months, he was sent to Korea as editor of the daily United Nations Herald.

While in Korea he covered the peace meetings at Panmunjom and later compiled and edited a pictorial history of the Korean Armistice. He received a commission as second lieutenant, after two years as an enlisted man.

Following the Footsteps of Miss Ohio

MISS JOAN HARRISON WITH MISS ALICE ANN McLAIN

CATCHING a few last details before winding up a step-by-step coverage of the Miss America contest from a local beauty contest to the real thing in Atlantic City is (left) Joan Harrison, '58.

Miss Harrison, a reporter for the Marion Star in Marion, O., is with Miss Ohio of 1960, Alice Ann McLain of Marion, in her home following an exciting week at the Miss America pageant Sept. 5-10.

The OU journalism graduate traveled with Miss McLain's family to the national pageant.

"We stayed in the motel across the street from the hotel where she (Miss McLain) resided during her stay," Miss Harrison relates.

"I was really kept on my toes with wiring back at least one story every night and taking pictures."

She had the distinction of being the only woman photographer present.

Miss Harrison "fully intended to spend lots of time soaking up that wonderful New Jersey sun and salt air, but only managed to squeeze in three hours during the six days there."

Most of her time was spent at the convention hall "trying to get the inside dope on how Miss Ohio was doing."

The Marion reporter relates an exasperating attempt to catch a picture of Miss Ohio with Miss America, of 1960, Lynda Lee Mead. Each time she got both girls together, the director, James Hatcher, would call for everyone to take their places immediately. It took her three hours to accomplish this feat.

A member of Sigma Kappa sorority, Miss Harrison worked a year as society editor, reporter and feature writer on the Oberlin News-Tribune (a weekly paper edited by Don Pease, '53) before accepting her present position in June of 1959.

"As you can imagine, the opportunity to cover a story like the pageant was quite a thrill to me," comments Miss Harrison. "It was a real experience being behind the scenes of this spectacular and something I shall long remember."
